You’re invited to a panel on
Pluralities, Publics, and Citizen Science

Through the interdisciplinary lens of various citizen science projects, panel participants will explore questions related to their experiences with multi-situational knowledge, multi-positional identity, and multi-dimensional power in community-engaged scholarship.

Moderated by Dr. Janet Heesch,
Associate Dean of Faculty, California State University at Sacramento
Dr. Heesch earned her Ph.D. in Sociocultural Studies of Education at the University of California, Davis, after nearly twenty years of service in public education in California.

Participants:
- Dr. Dara M. Wald
  Assistant Professor, Greenlee School of Journalism & Communication
  Wald’s research explores the use of effective communication and collaboration techniques to facilitate public engagement in natural resource management.

- Ulrike Passe and Dr. Linda Shenk
  Associate Professor of Architecture & Associate Professor of English
  Passe and Shenk collaborate in the recently funded ISU presidential initiative project on data-driven decision making for sustainable cities.

- Drs. Katherine Richardson Bruna, Gale Seiler, and Lyric Bartholomay
  Associate Professors in Education and Associate Professor of Pathobiological Sciences (UW-Madison)
  Richardson Bruna, Seiler, and Bartholomay are the principal investigators on the Urban Ecosystem Project which aims to interrupt the reproduction of education and health disparities in a low-income, urban context, and to support historically-excluded youth in their trajectories toward science.
